coat pockets, but he preferred five days imprisonment to parting with any of his money.

According to his story, Rosselli refused to mingle with the other prisoners in the corridor. At about 4 F. M. Hickey grabbed the hat off the old man's head and ran into the closet, Rosselli followed, whereupon Hickey knocked him down.

Then McDonald appeared, and together they searched the old man but failed to find the bag with the larger amount of money.

Rosselli was dazed and bleeding when he appeared at the closet door. The prisoners seered at him, and he was afraid of his life. At the first opportunity he called Keeper M. J. McCluskey, paid his fine and then told the story of the robbery, McCluskey immediately searched Hickey and McDonaid and several others, but failed to find the money.

Yesterday Rosselli reported the matter to Police Headquarters, and the two suspects were brought before inspector McLuskey told him Staturday afternoon that Rosselli had 120 in his pockets and to get it if he could, and that he (McCluskey) would "stand for it."
